>"I swear you finished that book last week." Olivia commented as she closed their bedroom door after checking everything one last time before she came to bed.

"I like it." Alex replied without even looking up.

"What is it?" Olivia asked out of interest as she got into bed. Alex pulled the book mark off the bedside table and placed it in the book before passing it to Liv.

"Breakfast at Tiffany's." Alex smiled. Liv nodded slightly before handing it back to her.

"Why that book, shouldn't you be reading some Law Journal or something?" Alex laughed as she shook her head.

"God no, I love what I do, but sometimes I need a break, all through college and University all I ever read were Law Journals!" Olivia could picture it, her sat in sweats and a tank top, hair a mess, but completely focused on the page. How she would have loved to see it.

"I like this bookâ€|" Olivia nodded at her serious answer.

After a moment of silence between the two Alex took her book back, opening it again, casting a glance over to Olivia as she did so.

"What about other books by him?" Liv moved her head so she could see the front of the book again, trying to get the authors name.

"I don't know, Liv. Are we going to play 20 questions or are you going to sleep?" Olivia grinned at the response she got before laying down.

"Well, I know you pretty well and the fact I don't know your favourite book and why you love it so much, I just think as your girlfriend I should know the little things too." Olivia answered sweetly as she laid on her side, looking up at the blonde who seemed to be touched by the response.

"I got the book when I was younger, as a gift." Olivia nodded.

Alex again put her bookmark in and put her book on the side, laying down so she was at Olivia's level, knowing her girlfriend well enough to know that she wouldn't stop until she got a proper answer.

"I like it, and I have read it that many times that I know the book, so for me it's easy to read, so I read it when I am not busy or when I am waiting on verdicts or at night. It's not like I don't read other books."

"But you like this one more?"

>"Olivia, it's a book, why the game of twenty questions? I'm sure when you were smaller you had favourite books and television shows and movies." Alex smiled at her.

Olivia nodded before reaching out to take her lovers hand.

"That's not an answerâ€|"

>"Fine. I got the book as a gift when I was in Law School, and I read it all in two days, and from then on in I said to myself that is what I would do.""What would you do?" Olivia asked, now confused.

"I would work at Tiffany's if I didn't pass the bar." Alex said it with so much sarcasm that Olivia didn't believe her at first, she just looked at her with a slight frown.

"I am being serious, I told myself if I wasn't a lawyer, I would work at Tiffany's." Alex rolled over on her side leaving Olivia to just lay there for a minute before she snuggled up closer to the blonde.

"So, is that the only reason?" Olivia began again and Alex could help but laugh as the two seemed to get back into the conversation, Alex knew she probably wouldn't get much sleep now.
